LIQUOR CONTROL FAILS TO LESSEN CRIME FIGURES

Senator Wadsworth's Statements Are Said in Montreal to Be Incorrect

DRINKING ON PREMISES IS NOT FORBIDDEN

Sales of Beer Increased Last Year by Over 1,000,-000 Gallons

Because of the persistence with which the weets in the United States have put forward the system of Hquor control in certain provinces in Canada as a model. The Christian Science Monitor recently sent staff correspondent to the border to make an investigation of conditions there. The result of his investigation appears in a series of articles, the eighth of which is

MONTREAL (Staff Correspond-once)—It was the political boast of Quebec that its government liquor control system would end bootleg-ging and reduce crime, but official bec figures and statements now show that it has done nothing of the sort. Senator Wadsworth of New York, the champion of the Quebec system in the United States, in a statement carried on the front pages of New York newspapers June 9, was the last American wet to indorse this fallacy. He said:

fallacy. He said:

"The principles of the Quebec plan, I believe, are sound. The plan as a result of the Government taking over the sale exclusively of all alcoholic beverages and forbidding the consumption of these beverages upon the premises where sold, does away with the saleonad principle lives. with the saloon and private liquor traffic. The people themselves decide what they want and they attain it under strict government regulation and in a way quite free from the evil conditions so prevalent in the old days."

the old days."

In the first place one is told immediately upon arrival in Montreal that Mr. Wadsworth does not understand the working of the so-called Quebec system. In the second place, one is told that his sanguine interpretation of what the Quebec system really has accomplished, is incorrect.

Consumption Not Ferbidden

The Quebec Liquor act does not forbid the consumption of liquor on premises. There are now 59 restaurants, more than 100 clubs, 489 hotels and 573 taverns in the full ide of selling intoxicating liquor 12 hours a day for consumption on the premises in the Province of Quebec.

The writer walked down Montreal's water front, saw half a dozen reeling men emerge from as many taverns, and noted that no matter how stagnant the trade of all the other stores along the street might be, the corner saloons (which by courtesy have been rechristened "taverns" in the Province are always full, lively, and doing a rushing trade. It is true that the law forbids the sale of distilled spirits by the laws and sale these only to be the sale of distilled spirits by the laws and sale the sale of distilled spirits by the trade. It is true that the law forbids the sale of distilled spirits by the glass and sells these only in bottles at Government stores, but high-proof wines and over are sold everywhere in taverns and clubs and restaurants, while the wholesale and illicit sale of whisky by bootleggers right under the nose of the Quebec Liquor Commission is best proved by the statements of the liquor commission itself.

Figures showing damage done by automobiles in the United States were presented. Property destroyed annually was valued at $600,000,000 by the Secretary of Commerce more than "ten times the disaster of our railways, and they carry about the same number of passenger miles. Thus," Mr. Hoover added, "the Department of Commerce, which devotes itself to reduction of natural wastes, becomes interested and naturally itself to reduction of natural wastes, becomes 'nterested and naturally turns to your association as representing the police force of the country for co-operation in finding methods of solution."

That the association "will continue to exert itself to secure the adoption of the principles laid down by the national conference on street and highway safety" was a hope expressed by Mr. Hoover in commenting on the fundamental ideas upon which the Washington meeting agreed. These were repeated, as "simple and direct principles."

They required, Mr. Hoover noted, that all drivers of motor vehicles shall first prove their ability to drive without endangering the public; that careless driving must be so effectually punished as to keep drivers alert on their jobs; that persons convicted of reckless driving and criminal driving should be deprived of the right to drive and otherwise vigorously punished; that in order to secure enforcement of regulations special traffic officials and traffic courts must be created and definite methods adopted by which

Threat of Capital Levy
The allied debt question figures largely in the discussions proceeding here as to how the French financial situation can be restored.

The Times says today: "Much of the nervousness which has led to the due not only to the fear of depreciation of the franc as a result of continued inflation, but also to the fear of a capital levy. This project the subject to ratification by Parliament. There is great danger that this work of a potential settlement and pacification will go overboard, together with the experts' report which points the way to a recovery to an un-willing nation. The financial position of France is worse than any time since the war, and the country itself is responsible.

"In the new circumstances yesterday's debate in the Commons was shorn of much of its value, for obviously it is of limited use to discuss the terms and effects of an in-strument which may not come into action. At the same time, the debate did serve one useful purpose—that of revealing both the general opinion that Britain had given everything possible to effect what had been thought a prudent settlement and the minority opinion that we had gone beyond that limit. The warn-ing that no French Government can expect further to tighten the screw on the British taxpayer may yet prove of utility in facilitating ac-ceptance across the Channel of the extremely indulgent terms accorded as a British minimum."

Unemployment in France

The announcement that the total unemployed totals about of a population of about 40,000,000 seems a curious economi-cal contradition to the franc situation. All British economists are aware that the unemployment crisis which is inevitable in France when currency stabilization is ultimately

France has imported 3,000,000 foreign workers since 1914, mostly Italian, Spanish, Belgian, Polish, Swiss and Russian, and when the export trades slump, as is inevitable, widespread unemployment is as-sumed to be sure to follow. It is obviously impossible to deport any considerable part of 3,000,000 people, and the French view the prospect with anxiety. The situation will resemble Germany's unemployment problem during stabilization. except that Germany's workers were

He added that Great Britain, like all the other alites, spent vast sums in the United States on food, as well as on munitions. All loans to the Allies were specifically limited by Congress to the prosecution of the war, and the United States Treasury required and obtained full justification for every cent loaned.

This measure is now before the House of Commons eiter being passed in the House of Lords upon the Bishop of London's motion. It is to enable 18 pid churches, of which is were designed by Sir Christopher Wren, the Isinous seventienth contury architect, and are historically interesting, to be demolished.

These churches are practically mused owing to the area in which they are affunted having ceaned to be residential, and the exclasiastical authorities desire to sell the size and provide churches in populous areas elsewhere. In the 12 months ending on that date there had been 4806 complaints laid against bootleggers and "blind pigs," as against only 3823 in the equal period preceding, an increase of 1000. The total population of the Province, it mightbe recalled, is about 2,500,000, with a drink bill of $20,000,000. On April 30, 1925, the liquor commission had 1136 noncompleted investigations of this character, as against only 498 the year previous. These figures indicate how bootlegging is growing.

The report states:

"The excess of 679 completed investigations during the course of 1924-25 demonstrates that a very active campaign was waged against illicit resorts (blind pigs) both in the city and country. As in the past, it has been proved that the tenants of such illegal resorts use every effort to continue doing business at the place where they have been already established. Nevertheless, we succeeded in having several closed up, but many still remain open in apite of repeated raids made on them. Special mention must be made of certain so-called clubs where the owners dely the law and which up to the present we have found impossible to close up definitely.

Mrs. Ferguson won the last election on a "family vindication" platform. Her husband had been impeached as Governor and the wife took the case to the voters.

Dan Moody, attorney-general, opposing Mrs. Ferguson, answers that James E. Ferguson is in fact governor and is seeking a fourth term; that he usurps all the privileges of governor without having any official responsibility, to the people; that he dominates other state departments, and especially the highway department; that the state's business has been wastefully managed in the interest of James E. Ferguson and his favorites.

As Attorney-General, Mr. Moody Arought suit for and obtained cancellation of road building contracts running into millions of dollars and forced the contractors to reimburse the state several hundred thousand dollars of alleged excess profits of contracts which he charges were made at the instance of James E. Ferguson as adviser of the Highway Commission. summer of 1934. BISHOP PLEADS FOR WAR ENDING

Britain and America, Christian Endeavorers Are Told, Could Stop Conflicts

By Cable from Monitor Bureau LONDON, July 20 - A message from President Coolidge and addresses by the Bishop of London and Lloyd George voicing hopes for universal peace, thrilled thousands of Endeavor convention now in session here. Lloyd George Advocates Eradication of War

LONDON, July 20 (A)-The supreme task of the generation now arising is to achieve the substitution of organized justice for organized violence, said the former British Premier, Mr. Lloyd George in addressing the seventh world convention, of Christian Endeavor in the Crystal Palace.

of civilization."

Mr. Lloyd George said a similar eradication should take place in industrial life. Strikes and lockouts were all part of the same relic of barbarism. There ought to be some means of insuring justice between nations and classes. The two essentials of peace were arbitration on all issues and disarmament. As long as great armies remained, there would be trouble.

"I was one of those where the first largest collection consisted of fish. Headed by Capt. George F. Simmons, the expedition spent 31 months gathering the specimens. issues and disarmament. As long as great armies remained, there would be trouble.

"I was one of those who had to bear the burden, some years ago, of leading the youth of the world into war," he continued. "That is why I am an earnest advocate of peace." He briefly defended the Treaty of Versailles as the instrument which created the League of Nations, gave liberty to oppressed peoples and established the international labor bureau.

But he conceded that it was a human instrument and therefore imperfect; and it was vital that its conditions "should be just as subject to judicial arbitrament as any other dispute between nations."

Microscopic Bombs

Among the interesting specimens brought back is Portuguese Man of War, known to natural science as a siphonophore. The fish possesses tenacies speckled with microscopic bombs which explode when they land on its victim, and fire minute harpoons into the fiesh.

The "Sea Devil" or "Vampire of the Sea," closely resembling the stingares of these waters, was harpooned by the Blossom. and re-establish the people's liberties before the elections are held.

The cause of the various deportations was that when President Pangalos expressed the desire to adopt his opponents' view of having a service cabinet, to proceed with the elections and even submit the validity of his election to a referendum, Andrew Michalskopoulos. Georgios Kafandaris, and Alexander Papanastasiou made simultaneous declarations to the effect that the only solution was the forthwith removal of President Pangalos, because, they contended, they could not believe in the truthfulness of his words, where upon President Pangalos gave up his conciliatory attitude and resorted to his former drastic policy.

In its legislative and executive powers the Cabinet will be fully independent of President Pangalos, who will continue his dictatorship only in economic questions. As to Mr. Entaxias program, he promises soon to give a full exposition. The purport of his fragmentary declarations is that he will co-operate with President Pangalos, primarily for the rehabilitation of the country's economics which he confesses are not in a flourishing condition and then he will endeavor to remove the causes which are keepcall upon acquired wealth. It would impose a special supertax in addition to the already high inheritance duties and supertax on the sale of property. -becoming "monstrous" and "dis-greeable and uncomfortable," as one metropolitan architect has pictured "It is in this connection that naturthe current tendencies, they must content themselves to grow more on the ground than into the air and yet not cover all the ground with buildings, either, according to the opinion of at least two leading cityplanning architects of Boston.

Palby Adams Cram formerly.

Adams Cram, formerly chairman of the Boston City Plan-ning Commission, and Arthur A. Shurtleff, who has made extensive threaten a great metropolitan city, so much is at stake that transporta-tion methods surely will be imtowns and for the State, were interviewed apropos of the recent suggestion by Frederick L. Ackerman of New York in a symposium of the American Institute of Architects that, "While we may readily produce... cities even more monstrous than any we have a great surface of the state of the state of the slow, not easily perceived, not easily understood, symptoms of the state of the slow, and the slow, and the slow, and the slow of the slow ... cities even more monstrous than any we have as yet been able to conceive in our dramatization of the urban future, it does not follow that . . . we will be able to hold and occupy the cities we build." Mr. Ackerman's premise was that with increased magnitude cities would become so disagreeable and uncomfortable to live in that people would desert

The

Accessibility Part of Value

"The value and use of a building depend upon its accessibility." he said. "No matter how fine a structure one puts up, if people cannot get to it conveniently, they will go somewhere else. A tall office building or large department store in a bottle-neck of parcow crooked streets may neck of narrow, crooked streets may bring so many people into these streets that the jam will make the location repulsive to everyone.

"Decentralization must become the keynote of our city building schemes now," he declared.

"People already are beginning to avoid the congested streets" he added. "They are finding less cramped places to work and shop. An important retail district is being developed back of Arlington Street in Boston because the streets in the old city below the Common are too harrow to carry more than their present traffic. Streets set the limits of communication, and communication sets the limits for skyward who is a school teacher, was one of Mr. Bauer's 12 rivals for the election "It would not be wise city planning to open more avenues into the downto open more avenues into the down-town district simply to pour more people into that section. Our new thoroughfares ought rather to disw away traffic into new and less crowded sections. I do not consider it worth while to try to relieve traffic congestion in downtown Boston. congestion in downtown Boston. Rather let it become so repugnant to people that they will get out and people that they will get out and discover the roomier streets on the south and west.

"Wider, Straighter Arteries"

"The newer sections of a city can provide wider, straighter arteries of transportation, and with those the chief factor of limitation on a city's growth will be lifted. With that, the argument that it is quicker to go from one office to another by means of elevator shafts than by means of gitreets will lose much of its weight, for with the automobile it is as easy to drive through several blocks of free streets as to walk across one of free streets as to walk across one "or two congested ones.

"Consequently I believe we can reasonably look for a spreading out rather than a continued piling up of city structures. I think," Mr. Cram concluded, "that from now on cities will grow horizontally more the control of the cont than vertically, and that life and business will be made more pleas-furable by the change."

Mr. Shurtleff placed emphasis on the saving of natural open ground while a city is pushing its edges out-ward and while suburban towns are ward and while suburban towns are growing to meet each other. Cities and towns of the metropolitan district of Boston should not be allowed to grow together to form one unproken mass, but strips of open ground which now separate these communities and give individuality to each town should be preserved.

In all these countries, whether in the streatile was a size of size the attractively desired type of size the attractive permanently, he urged.

"Parks," said Mr. Shurtleff, "must regarded in these days as a sort insurance of cities against deterioration and consequent loss of the vast treasure of money and labor represented in the city as a struc-ture. Parks in the future will serve In exceedingly important function in relieving the sense of monotony and confinement which tends to increase with city growth, quite aside from their service to recreation.

New Kinds of Limits

'The maximum potential size of cities no longer is limited by the considerations which limited the size of London and Paris two centuries ago, he remarked. Capacity of water supply, food supply and sanitation constituted the limitations then. Lon-don and Paris, as well as American cities, now are capable of indefinite growth so far as these conditions are concerned, Mr. Shurtleff believes.

New factors which will measure the extent to which it will be desirable to increase city populations were named by Mr. Shurtleff as (1) fransportation and (2) attractive-pess. Underground and overhead transportation offer leeway in that problem which is limited only by cost and the objection to shadows from elevated structures. Noises of transportation can be eliminated if necessary, he asserted, though granting that the process would be costly. Streets, he said, must be made more and more attractive by plantiag trees and shrubbery and by use of street decorations, lighting and bridging.

Major Logan was born at Musquodobolt, N. S., and spint his boyhood there. He heard a legend of a French ship, laden with co'n and gold and silver plate, which was forced into a small harbor near Halifax in 170d. The treasure was unloaded, carried inland, and sunk at the bottom of a lake, it is said.

After he came to New York Major Logan found in a private library the privateer, in which was a parallel tale of a Nova Scotia treasure. The records told of a French sailor whose life was spared by the crew of the Spanish privateer when it selzed at the secret of the hidden gold.

The privateer sailed for Nova Scotia; its crew found the gold, but heard the booming of guns on a French ship and reburied the treasure. The captain never returned for it, but left instructions to his son as to its location. The son, however, also failed to go after it, as far as Major Logan was able to learn.

I flew. Ah, the station at last. Strange; everything locked and not a guard in sight. I sat in solitude on a stone bench, and finally at half-past eleven the train for Rothenburg arrived. Someone had blundered.

All the seats in the second-class carriages were taken, but I found room in a third-class compartment, where a large man was making everyone laugh by telling of the depreclated currency in Austria, which was then in a worse plight than Germany. A woman with a bunch of faded dahlias and a bundle of umbrellas and canes, kept getting up brellas and canes, kept getting up and dropping the umbrellas and canes, putting the dablias on the seat, and then being rescued from sitting on them. Two fresh-complexioned and snub-nosed young women confided to each other that I was an auslander, and stared at me in horrid fascination, until an elderly woman automated.

And how are German children of even the most unfortunate kept so clean and quiet? Not by harsh treatment surely; they are too happy looking for that. Even the ducks and geese waddling through the streets shared in their scremity, and it was not without friendliness that the great white exen looked at me from their mild eyes. The animals, too, must lead a goodly life.

As for mere tourists like myself, we were in a state of perpetual, if uninformed admiration. We could be seen walking around with little books, exclaiming.

Then one had to visit as many inns as possible. Of these the Hot von Baumeristehaus, over whose paved court rose wooden balconies, with masturitums streaming like medieval banners, was easily the most satisfying. I know that nothing but d'Artagnan's being of another country and century prevented him from swinging down from a balcony, and picking a duel with one of the tourists.

Change at Steinach

A guard interrupted my meditations by telling me to get out at the next stop, which I of course expected to be Rothenburg. When it turned out to be Steinach, it was not only discouraging, but a poser. While I was wondering what to do, the lady with the kitten clambered to the platform, attended by a large assortment of bundles. I offered to relieve her of some of them, but instead she handed me the kitten, now become indignant.

"Wo, wo jst Rothenburg." I quavered, clutching at the little beast. She waved a huge suitcase in the direction of another train, and started to dive into a tunnel after it. I and the exposulating kitten galloping behind. When we reached our destination, the engine was puming as though it didn't have a moment to spare, and in that hurried angulah known only to a belated traveler, I saw them safely into a third-class compartment before seeking the dignity of second class. Treat:

The allusion is clearly to the Lebanon, and the implication is that the Lebanon is to be excluded from the scope of the proposed France-Syrian Treaty. In that case there would presumably have to be a separate agreement as to the relations between France and the Lebanon.

LONDON—When M. de Jouvenel arrived in Syria as High Commissioner at the end of 1925, he almost immediately set to work to form a provisional Syrian Government. This was to be a first step toward a return to normal conditions and the establishment of a permanent modus vivendit etween Syria and the Mandatory Power. As the head of the provisional Government, M. de Jouvenel selected the Sheikh Taher Ed-Din, who did his best to gather round him a presentable Cabinet. He did not, however, succeed in obtaining the necessary support. The Syrian Nationalists refused to co-operate, and by the end of January the negotiations had broken down.

M. de Jouvenel was accordingly obliged to look elsewhere, and it was recently announced that Damad Ahmed Nami, a son-in-law of the Bultan Abdul Hamid, has been installed as President of the Syrian State.

In view of his Turkish connections, Damad Ahmed Nami is not regarded as an altogether fortunate thoice, but a Syrian Government is actually in being, at least on paper, though its representative character is considered doubtful and it remains to be seen how much authority it will be able to exercise.

Elections Not Successful

The Government is provisional in the sense that it is out to act as a stop-gap, pending the establishment of a constitutional regime. Syria aliready has been invited to elect a Representative Assembly, but in some parts of the country the elections have proved a flagoo, and in others, notably at Demascus, it has not yet been possible to proceed with them. Meanwhile, the provisional Government has made its own proposals for a final settlement.

According to reports from Beirut, M. de Jouvens! has agreed that the relations between Prance and Syrian and that of his provisional Government are obscure.

Machinery Is Set Up to Obtain Co-operation in Border Commerce

MEXICANS JOIN

AMERICANS FOR

BETTER TRADE

LOS ANGELES (Staff Correspondence)-Economic unity of north western Mexico and the southwestern United States has been brought a step nearer practical realization by chambers of agriculture and commerce of both districts, which have just completed the establishment of permanent machinery for solving their mutual problems.

Following suggestions made by agricultural, commercial and governmental delegates from California. Arizona and the Mexican west coast, who met at a reciprocal conference on trade and quarantine held here, a prominent trade body in each country has undertaken to represent the interests of its district in promoting border friendship and co-operation.

For Mexico, this organization is the Camara Agricola y Comercio del Rio Mayo of Navojoa, Sonora, and for the United States the Los Angeles Champer of Commerce.

With the formal acceptance by these chambers of the burden placed upon them by the conference, an impartial international body has been set up which stands ready at all times to call together representa-tive business men from both sides of the border to discuss problems affecting them both, and, after having agreed upon a solution just to both sides, to urge that course upon their

No radio conference will be held in Washington next autumn, according to announcement made by Secretary Hoover. This will be the first time in five years that a radio conference has not been held.

Mr. Hoover believes, it is understood, that the calling of a conference in the autumn would effect no good purpose, inasmuch as last from insects infesting agricultural farms; 1925, $1297 for 15,330 farms.

The "average farmer" whose cause has been so prominently presented during the session of Congress just closed, made only $92 more in 1925 than in the preceding year. Average gross receipts for the farms surveyed for 1925 were $2550, including $933 from crop sales, $897 from sales of live stock, $585 from live-stock products, and $76 from miscellaneous products.

The following average expenses were deducted from these receipts: Hired labor, $386; live stock purchased, $242; feed, $244; fertilizer, $69; seed, $47; machinery and tools, $119; miscellaneous items, $179; taxes, $191.

Attention is called by the department to the fact that "no allowance has been made in the expense items for the labor of the farmer and his family, which was estimated by the farmers at an average value of $795."

A pair of "shorts" covered by a long pair of "shorts" covered by a long shirt has proved popular with the very young, and one-piece suits are still in favor with expert swimmers. For the general bather and espe-cially for older women the suits having knee-length bloomers with an overdress whose skirt has a circular cut, forming a flare, are more de-

This flare lends grace and ease to the costume while avoiding the wea-risome weight of old-time suits with gathered skirts. The bodice is usually sleeveless and low-neck, although some very chic models are shown with a high-necked bodice and short sleeves. The "crew-neck" and long sleeves are also seen. Instead of the flare, fullness without weight is sometimes obtained by rows of tiny ruffies; a particularly charming suit in scarlet taffets, had half a dozen or so of these ruffles round the bottom.

Materials

The choice of materials should be governed by the length of time one expects to stay in the water and by the temperature usually found therein, at the special locality chosen. There is nothing better for guarding against cold than some fabric of allweol. Some fabrics come in jersey, flannel, and knitted wear; silk and wool jersey is also good. At one very smart shop on Fifth Avenue, specializing in women's wear, the sports de-partment showed not only a rich col-lection of suits, at a good price, but ne excellent all-wool suits at the

Though not quite so warm as pure woot, allk textures have considerable th and are much lighter in ht. All sorts of silks are employed this season in the making of bathing suits, and in the good shops their colors are warranted not to run.

Beach Coats and Capes

It is essential in most climates to have a convenient wrap to wear be-fore going into the water and after coming out. Both capes and coats are seen in very smart designs. Sometimes they match the suit while sometimes they are chosen to form a harmonious ensemble. The capes Some of them are bedecked with short overcapes, some follow a military design, and others are cut with uneven hem lines.

Coats are rather newer than capes and though less graceful, are more practical and warmer, especially on windy days. They come in a great variety of styles, ranging from a three-quarter length tuxedo to a short military jacket. Striped jumpers are seen too. The materials are quite as varied as those in the suits and they are usually rubberized. It should be mentioned, by the way, that this treatment does not cause the fabric to lose its suppleness.

Both grown people and children will enjoy the rubber floats which are popular this season and which come in amusing shapes. While they are more or less circular in form, like the old-fashioned rubber rings, they are finished with appendages so as to present amusing caricatures of such water animals as ducks, frogs and seals. One of the latter was seen in a large establishment, not a de-partment store, near the Grand Cen-tral Station. Truth to say, Ichabod Crane was a conscientious man, and ever bore in mind the golden maxim, "Spare the rod, and spoil the child." His scholars were not spoiled. But Ichabod followed the classic injunction of Thomas Fuller, "(The good schoolmaster) studieth his scholars' natures as carefully as they their books," and judiciously applied rewards and penalties according to individual needs.

Related to our American author as confessed disciple is Mary Russell Mitford, whose vignettes of school life in "Our Village" body forth the same shrewd and sympathetic observation. Her sketches, however, are more circumstantial than Irving's; they trace, in fact, the whole history of her school through three centuries, recording the different types of teachers who taught during the time with which her story is concerned. After the passing of several unsuitable incum-bents, a veritable paragon appeared Mrs. Allen "was an elderly woman . . of an exceedingly ven-erable and prepossessing appear-ance. Still a third distinguished woman novelist in the same generation, and the greatest of all, has given us in "Adam Bede" a notable and, I be lieve, the first picture of that vital educational development, the night school for adults. The Little Green Pasture

It was full of sunshine, with tree shadows on the grass, singing birds and wild rose perfume; and except for beauty. I do not know why it was at all. And it would not be right to remember the little green pasture without the tree frogs, cockle burs and bumble bees. Every rail-fence corner was a castle, with stake and rider towers and wells. The crickets played their fiddles there and we were sure the June bugs danced, and it was there the bob-whites sometimes hid their nests. I will take you along the narrow path that ran the longest way across the little pasture, and if you can be a little boy or a little girl for a It was full of sunshine, with tree ter.... And it touched the tenderest fiber in Bartle Massey's nature; for such full grown children as these were the only pupils for whom he had no severe epithets, and no impatient tones. He was not gifted with an imperturbable temper, and on music nights it was apparent that patience could never be an easy virtue to him; but this evening, as he glances over his spectacles at Bill Downes, the sawyer, who is turning his head on one side with a desperate sense of blankness before the letters, d, r, y, his eyes shed their mildest and most encouraging light."

Such a standard of delineating the living conditions of the schoolroom will not be easy to maintain. Yet two other, English novelists of the same period mustered all their powers to picture at far greater extent school life. The first is Thomas Hughes, the companion volumes of whom. "Tom Brown's School Days," and "Tom Brown at Oxford" perists to this day as the unequaled interpretations of English public school and university experience from the point of view of the student. The other is Charles Dickens, the greatest of them all in the deep human poignancy of his scenes. Who that has ever read "Dombey and Son" and "Nicholas Nickleby" will forget in the one that genteel establishment of Dr. Blimber—"a great hot-house in which there was a forcing apparatus incessantly at work "and in the other the unspeakable Dotheboys Hall?

These are but glimpses of the more significant portraits and scenes of the school, as the injectent century novelists studied their subject in the concerne method of their art. As yet the fiction writers of the twentieth century novelists studied their subject in the concerne method of their art. As yet the fiction writers of the twentieth century have not challed the effectiveness of their achievements. But out of the renewed and universal interest in education we may hope—"

Roosevelt on the Screen

Frank Hopper, born and raised in Newark, N. J., and heretofore unknown to fame, has been chosen to play the character of Theodore Roosevelt in "The Rough Riders," which paramount is planning to make one of its biggest productions this year. He was chosen by Hermann Hagedorn, biographer of Roosevelt and secretary of the Roosevelt Memorial Association;

Lewis Maverick of San Antonio, Tex., vice-president of the Rough Riders Association, and Victor Fleming, who will direct the picture. More than 400 candidates were considered for the rôle, Hopper was on the stage for a number of years and later went into business in Montana. At the time of his selection he was working for a book concern in Los Angeles. He is said to look much like Roosevelt. Two of the latest directions Roosevelt. He will remember, as I remember, that in pre-war days there was a disused warehouse in Holborn, where under the name of "Cosmopolis," a new theater began to flourish—and week by week plays were given in French, Spaniah, Italian and German, to eager crowds of English folk as well as foreigners, until the "day," Aug. 4, 1914, nipped it in the bud, as it did so many enterpriags of international amity.

Billings, Jean Worth and Jerry Lynch.

David Bennett has been engaged by Charles Dillingham to stage the dances for "Criss Cross," the mugical comedy in which Fred and Dorothy Stone will be starred. The production is to go into rehearsal maxt month in New York.

"The Little Spitfirs," a comedy by Myron C. Fagan, has been placed in rehearsal in New York for the discretion of quite a colony in the metropolis."

I pricked up my ears!

A few days later I met a Spaniard
at the Centre Espanol, our Spanish Club. He said: "How I appreciate the effort of your Renaissance Theater to revive Calderon's 'Life's a Dream,' aibeit that Fitzgeraid's wonderful
English is but a fragment of the many enterprises of international amity.

The time is riper than ever now to pick up the thread and twine it into a solid cable. One man can do it—should do jt—not only in London, but also in New York. And let me tell you in the same breath that, as I write, Comœdia in Paris, over the signature of André Rivoire, the renewned dramatist, advocates the cause of a "Theater of Nations"—a cause that will work as effectively (perhaps more so) for international fraternization, as the round-table conferences in Geneva. English is but a fragment of the original. How thankful I am to Miss Kitty Willoughby, that in the autumn at her International Theater she will produce Echegaray's masterplece, 'El Gran Galeoto.' But listen to the original," and, "séance tenante," as

"The Little Spitfire," a comedy by Myron C. Fagan, has been placed in rehearsal in New York for the new season, under the direction of A. H. Van Buren, F. A. Witbeck is the producer,

"Peaches," a musical comedy book "Peaches," a musical comedy book by Louis Simoa and Bids Dudley, with music by Albert von Tilzer, will be produced by L. Lawrence Weber in New York about Oct. 1.
Patterson McNutt, in association with Marc Connelly and Thomas Mitchell, has acquired the road rights of "The Wisdom Tooth," by arrangement with John Golden, The play's tour begins in October.

BOSTON STOCKS PANHANDLE OIL FIELD EXPANDS

Output Now 57,000 Barrels Daily-Phillips Petroleum Big Factor

In the five counties comprising the new Panhandle oil field of Texas there are at present close to 200 wells, producing in the aggregate 57,000 barrels of crude oil daily.

This is the highest mark this field has yet touched, and is an increase of 10,000 barrels daily over the average of a month ago. It bids fair to touch the expected mark of at least 75,000 barrels daily by fail.

There are 525 wells now being drilled in the Panhandle by all companies. Among the larger producers operating there are the Marland, Texas, Humble Oil, Skelly and Standard Oil of Indiana. The Santa Fe Railroad is rapidly building a 28-mile stretch of road from Amarilla to the field and it is expected that by Aug. 15 freight will be moving over the new route.

Incidentally, Santa Fe officials in Texas say that the Panhandle station today is the largest on the system in point of freight shipments and receipts outside of Chicago. The pressure at that point in oil and oil supplies shipped out, and the receipt of new equipment is enormous. All material is now being transported over the highway in motor trucks at a cost of from $5 to $6 a ton.

Big Operations

from $5 to $6 a ton.

Blg Operations

Phillips Petroleum, one of the first to begin operations in a big way in the Panhandle, has 21 producing well-with an output of 17,500 barrels of crude oil daily. It has 11 55,000-barrel tanks already installed, and within 30 days will have 22 55,000-barrel tanks in the field. Of a total of 207 wells being drilled in all fields of the Mid-Continent district. Phillips has 72 wells drilling in the Panhandle with 2000 "locations" in proved territory.

The Phillips Company does not do its own drilling. It owns the rigs, equipment, etc., but it lets the drilling contract at a cost of $4.50 to $5 a foot, the drilling contractor furnishing the labor, supervision, etc.

The average depth of wells in the Panhandle field is $300 feet, the "pay" sands being hit at about 2900 feet and each well takes on the average about $325 tons of casing.

Cash Expenditures

Cash Expenditures

The Phillips Company has three natural gasoline plants in the Panhandle field, and it is interesting from a New England industrial standpoint to note that the company uses exclusively Badger stills and Walworth valves. The ultimate capacity of the new gasoline plants there will be 100,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas a day. On the completion of its gasoline plants in the Panhandle, it is estimated the Phillips Company will have spent about $3.000,000 cash in that field.

By Aug. 15 the Phillips Company will be making $50,000 gallons of natural gasoline a day. It is at present producing $65,000 gallons and the company has already contracted for $5 per cent of its total gasoline production up to March 1, 1927, at a price based on the market level for gasoline prevailing during time of delivery.

The Phillips Company is producing 47,000 burrels of crude oil daily. This is the highest production it has had since its formation. Notwithstanding its large development program, the company is not borrowing a dollar nor does it contemplate doing so. It has more than $6,000,000 cash, and has ample working capital for present needs.

VAN SWERINGEN'S NEW TERMS ARE ACCEPTED BY PERE MARQUETTE

NEW YORK, July 20 (P)—New terms offered by the Yan Sweringens for inclusion of the Pere Marquette Railway in the Nickel Plate merger, were approved by the directors today, upon recommendation of a special sub-committee.

The principal points are that prior preference stock will receive in exchange the same amount of 6 per cent preferred stock of the new Nickel Plate company, or at the option of stockholders, the same amount in Chesapeake & Ohlo 5 per cent guaranteed atock.

The preferred stock of the Pere Marquette will receive 90 per cent of 6 per cent, new Nickel Plate preferred, or at the option of stockholders, at the end of one year, $95 in cash, plus accrued dividends at the rate of 5 per cent.

SIX CURRENT ISSUES OF SMITH BONDS

A CIRCULAR we have just published describes six issues of Smith Bonds which we regard as the most attractive group of investments we have ever offered at one time.

1. These bonds combine interest rates of 6½%, 6¼% and 7% with the safeguards that have resulted in our record of no loss to any investor in 53 years.

Appraisals by local real estate au-thorities, in the cities where the proper-ties are located, show the wide margin of security between the value of the property and the amount of each mortgage. This margin of safety is constantly increased by monthly sinking fund pay-

3. The properties which constitute the first mortgage security are located in Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Albany. You have a wide range of choice if you wish to purchase a single bond, and a widely diversified se-lection if you are prepared to purchase

HIDE MARKET IS GENERALLY STRONG

Sales Last Week Total Well Over the 100,000 Mark

Over the 100,000 Mark

During the last week the packer hide market was not only strong but some of the more active sort were advanced from 1 cent upward. Sales during the week aggregated well over 100,000 hides and packers are sold up. There was little trouble in geting 1½c advances on native steer# and it on pulloffs. Buttbranded steers were strong all the week, the principal sales bringing 13½c with 14c asked at 1t's close.

Prisorine steers have had an improving demand of late and prices have been strong.

Calf akins are selling a bit more freely, A late sizable sale of June calf akins brought 19½6. Some packers are demanding 20c, and others 21c.

City calf akins seem to be strongly established at 18c.—Packer kips are firm on the better qualities, quotations for car load lots ruling strong at 15-16.

18c. As a whole the packer calf and kip situation now has an encouraging aspect.

ACTIVE DEMAND DEVELOPING IN CLOTH MARKET

Price Advances in Nearly All Lines Fail to Slow Up Buying

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., July 20 (Special)-Trade continued active in primary cotton goods markets during the last week, and price advances all along the line failed to slow up buying. There has been more demand for forward-delivery goods than has been experienced in three months or more, and the volume of sales of this character has been limited more by the reluctance of mills to sell too far ahead at present prices than it has by hesitation from the buying standpoint.

The activity has not been confined to any particular part of the market, but has embraced nearly all lines. Heavy goods, such as Osnaburgs, cotton duck and drills have moved in better volume recently, and the selling this week has tended to become even broader in character than that of a week or two ago.

Napped goods have come in for a share of the buying interest, flannels, blankets and pajama checks being taken in liberal quantities for reasonably early deliveries. Colored goods lucluding ginghams, and chambrays have been in better demand and a very large business in denims is reported. primary cotton goods markets during

BUSINESS IN CANADA HOLDS AT GOOD PACE

Improved Crop Outlook-Domestic Trade Better-Steel Orders Up

OTTAWA, July 20 (Special)-Business conditions in Canada continue generally satisfactory, while improved ing of confidence in the future trend has gone on to a farm with a view ing of confidence in the future trend of trade.

Manufacturing conditions are reported as encouraging. In the principal manufacturing centers of Ontario and Quebec, plants are operating at or near capacity, and with a gratifying number of orders on hand.

The first Government grain estimate of the present season is fairly satisfactory, though the figures do not indicate as great a yield as last year. The estimated wheat yield, as indicated by crop conditions on June 30 is 248,626,000 bushels. The total estimated yield for oats is 458,840,000 bushels: barley, 100,624,000 bushels; arye, 11,762,000 bushels, and flaxseed, 8,419,000 bushels.

Dominion Steel Operators

Significant industrial news of the last week includes the announcement by W. E. Rundle, general manager of the National Trust Company at present in charge of the affairs of the Sydrey steel mills of the Dominion Iron & Steel Company, that the mills will continue to be operated without interruption. The nail and wire mills have been operating spasmodically for several weeks, but it is reported that nail orders just obtained in western Canada insure four months' full time operation.

Domestic Trade Galas

The shipments of four for June this year totaled 1,029,490 barrels, an increase of 433,489 barrels compared with June of last year.

There has been a notable increase in domestic trade during the last couple of weeks. In the Maritime Provinces whoesale trade is reported as satisfactory and retail trade good. In the provinces of Quebec and Ontario an impetus has been given to many lines as a result of the influx of tourists, which, in point of numbers, bids fair to exceed all previous records.

Wholesalers throughout western canada report continued activity in all lines and prospects are considered excellent.

Good Mining Activity

Mining in British Columbia still shows great activity and there is every prospect of the $70,000,000 gnark being exceeded this year. Fair conditions exceeded this year. Fair conditions extended this year. Fair conditions to the Orient and the Antipodes are more frequent. There is also every indication of a good fishing year.
Industrial suspensions throughout Canada due to lack of orders are more rare now than in the earlier months of the year. The only marked interpritions in production now are being caused by shut-downs for repairs and replacement work.
Dealers report that in both semi-finished and finished steel, market demand is unusually good this month. Buyers who covered for their third and is unusually good this month. Buyers who covered for their third and is being maintained.
The eastern Canadian market for pig iron appears to be in a stronger position than that of Ontario, as some anticipation of higher iron prices is heard in Montreal, but in Ontario the tendency is downward, and there are reports of lower prices already having been quoted.

Coen Jr. in the second. This afternoon Tilden meets Donald S. Strachan of Philadelphia, a great little player, but hardly a match for the champion.

Strachan of Philadelphia, a great little player, but hardly a match for the champion.

Play in the doubles will also start this afternoon. Several teams of time possibilities have been assembled and play should reach a high standard before the semifinals are reached. Tilden, with his protege A. L. Wiener as usual, and Malcolm T. Hill and Henry L. Johnson, a strong junior pair. Alfred H. Chapin Jr. and Berkeley R. Bell: Lewis N. White and Louis Thalheimer are the American seeded doubles teams, while Takelichi Harada and Sekio Tawara is the seeded foreign team. The two college teams from California, whiner and runnerup in the intercollegiate tennis championship, while Miss Marjorie Leeming of Victoria, was successful indicated the inversity of California, the champions, and Cranston W. Holman and Lionel E. Ogden, Leland Stanford University pair, runnersup. The summary:

EDITORIALS

It is axiomatic that any issue once decided or determined, especially if the subject be one in which the moral convictions of a nation or state have been defined or expressed, ceases thereafter to be a political or partisan issue. When, with deliberation and thoughtful premeditation, the people, asserting their rights as sovereigns, write into their organic law their interpretation of what they declare, unqualifiedly, to be a common right, that pronouncement partakes of that fundamental characteristic which removes it, more than theoretically, from the realm of wordy controversy.

There is need that this clear concept of nationalistic solidarity and progress be realized. Without this finality, without the possibility of effectively closing the doors against nullification, no nation could insure itself against the necessity of forever being compelled to defend itself against its enemies, either within or without, who would destroy or render unsound the new superstructures erected by civilization as it advances. In the law there has been established the reasonable theory of res adjudicata, frequently applied to prevent an issue once determined from being again litigated between the original parties or those whose interests and rights have once been determined. Literal application of this accepted theory unquestionably clothes a constitutional amendment with an almost impenetrable armor.

In his address at Augusta, Ga., before the Protestant Ministers' Association, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho stated it as his opinion that attempts to repeal the dry law, by which he meant attempts to nullify the Constitution, constitute the greatest present danger to the Republic. He recommended that if neither of the two national parties would take a positive stand on the prohibition issue, "the people should organize another party which will be loyal to the Constitution of the United States." It may be agreed that Senator Borah has not been extravagant in his estimate of the menace which disregard for the law constitutes. This danger, as he sees it, does not lie along the route which was followed in establishing this great reform, to wit, in an orderly and formal expression of the deliberate convictions of the people concerned. It is because of this that he sees fit to warn of what he believes are new

He makes it plain that there is no excuse, in a democracy, for invoking the vicious and clumsy processes of nullification. There is no law which cannot be repealed, no provision of the Constitution which cannot be rewritten or expunged. But the nullificationists, he says, have no patience with this method. No doubt they realize that it would be impossible, even after the lapse of years, to induce the states to reverse the action which they have taken. "It is said," he observes, "that the Eighteenth Amendment is against conscience, oppressive—therefore disregard it. This is the precise argument which nullified contracts and the law of property in Russia." He does not believe it would take as long to amend the Constitution by the orderly processes provided as it will to convince the American people that nullification by the methods which are being urged by enemies of the law can be safely induiged in as a sound basis of government. He continues:

The sublime intuition of a great and orderly people will never accept any such doctrine. It would be a monstrous thing. It would be national self-abasement before all the world. An abased and contented people the American people can never be. We belong to a different breed of men. I venture to say there could be no greater exhibi-tion of self-abasement, of national degradation, than for this great people to leave the Eighteenth Amendment in ahead and live in daily disregard of it. It presents an outlook of national weakness which language is inadequate to describe.

There, it will be agreed, is a courageous and convincing statement of a cardinal and indisputable fact. Realizing this, what is to be the attitude of liberty loving and law-abiding Americans? Is their only recourse in what they must deem a great emergency to be a new political party organization? They should ponder this question deliberately and without prejudice. It was not by the aid of any single political party that this great reform was established. No political party will ever dare, we believe, to espouse the cause of nullification or ally itself with those who may seek the orderly repeal of the law as it has been written. If an impasse has been reached, as is claimed by those who perhaps have overestimated the number and influence of the declared nullificationists, then the time has come when every man, woman and child in the United States who is not for nullification must be for prohibition. This is not the time for the assertion of some claimed individual or personal right, or for some vague or imaginary state right. It is the time when national rights must be defended against the attacks of those who, in America as well as in some of the countries of the Old World, claim, or pretend to claim, that democracy has failed, that parliamentary governments can no longer be maintained, and that constitutional government is a thing of the past. The need of the hour, as Senator Borah declares, is not less democracy. but more; not less faith in constitutional government, but more.

While it may be that the casual reader of the day's news as it is presented to the public is not greatly interested, directly, in the announcement from Detroit that referees in bankruptcy, representing many important federal court jurisdictions in the United States recently met there, it is nevertheless a fact that the matters considered by them in conference are tremendously important to the commercial welfare of the country. It is sought by those present and those represented at the meeting to agree upon a uniform code of practice and upon a uniform schedule of fees in these courts, and to discourage, by such means as may be devised and deemed effective, the flagrant and open perpetration of frauds by unscrupulous debtors, sometimes, it is alleged, through the connivance of creditors whom they seek to favor, with the understanding, of course, that those thus conspiring together will profit at the expense of claimants whose rights are not properly safe-

Through revelations voluntarily made by those in a position to know whereof they speak, the annual losses by mercantile and supply com-panies in the United States through illegal practices perpetrated in bankruptcy proceedings average hundreds of millions of dollars. This item of waste, reckoned entirely apart from losses sustained through what may be termed legitimate insolvency, is estimated by one delegate to the Detroit meeting at $500,000,000 annually. This is a direct tax upon industry and an indirect tax, if one is to accept the theory usually propounded, upon the ultimate con-sumers. If it is true, as has been asserted, that all business losses are charged back to the business, and that to insure a fixed percentage of profit, one year with another, selling costs are made to equalize amounts thus written off, then the matter discussed by the assembled referees woman and child in the country. Those more or less familiar with the operation of the federal bankruptcy law testify to the fact that even when strictly administered it offers abundant opportunity for unjust and unfair practices. Designed to afford equitable relief to honest debtors unavoidably involved, it too often is invoked by those not really entitled to the relief which it affords. Open confession by those who spoke freely at the Detroit convention discloses the encouraging admission that the official referees themselves are in a position to check, and possibly to put an end to, these political dictators who govern according to their own desires, Denmark continues to furnish the example of a nation which is daily profiting from that self-government which is the underlying fundamental of the Social Democratic régime wherever it is properly understood and valued. At the close of the last parliamentary session of the Danish Rigsdag, the Stauning Cabinet went before the people with a report of what the Social Democratic Government had accomplished, and a close study of this presentation certainly reveals a statesmanship of a high order.

On that occasion the executive board of the Social Democracy of Denmark issued a statement that concisely speaks of what the party claims to have accomplished during the past year. The achievements in question include the facts that the Government's efforts to bring about healthy financial conditions in the country have to a large extent been successful, and that the valuta, or foreign exchange problem, has been solved "after its four years of mismanagement by the so-called 'citizens' collaboration.'" The statement added: "The executive board expresses its fullest agreement with what the Government has accomplished to meet the industrial crisis and ameliorate the condition of the unemployed."

That men like Th. Stauning and Frederick Jepesen Borgbjerg, the Minister of Social Affairs in the Cabinet, are leaving their impress on the political life of the Danish Nation goes without saying. At the various international congresses where Denmark is represented, both Stauning and Borgbjerg are given close attenparty's stanch insistence on disarmament is not always met with favor on the part of the big military powers, but when the question comes before the Danish Landsthing the coming fall, there will be no backing down as far as the Social Democratic régime is considered.

The Social Democracy of Denmark is divided into 999 political associations and today counts nearly 150,000 members. There has been an increase of 15,000 during the two years the next was hear an increase of the control of the Government. party has had control of the Government. As at present constituted, the Stauning Cabinet is a most homogeneous whole, and with Mme. Nina Bang, the Minister of Education, the women of Denmark are championed by one of the astutest of their sex, whose presence at the ministerial gatherings always lends a picturesque color to the proceedings. This summer will witness the sharpening of the political weapons of the four parties—the Social Democrats, the Right, or the Conserva-tives, as they are now called, the Left and the Radical Left wing. Heretofore success at the polls by the Social Democrats was made possible only through the co-operation of the Radicals, and it is to be assumed that the political fortunes of the two parties will be conducted to the and that the Conservatives are prevented the end that the Conservatives are prevented from gaining power. Indeed, to reduce the majority of the Conservatives in the Landsthing is the all-encompassing desire and aim of the Social Democratic Party. With that accomplished, a number of additional reform measures plished, a number of additional reform measures advocated by that party and the Government are advocated by that party and the Government are sure to pass.

It is not a little to the credit of the Danish disarmament movement that Holland is contemplating something in that direction and candidly says that Denmark is the model on which the Dutch base their proposed military reduction. There is a strong co-operative interest between the Social Democratic elements of these two countries. Small as they are in numerical strength, yet the moral effect of their political progress is not lost on a world which at base realizes the futility of vast armies and is groping about in the dark for some possible escape from the burdens militarism imposes. Denmark, for this reason, is exhibiting a genuine sense of independence in making its own way toward the accomplishment of the disarmament goal, regardless of what the powers may be considering from their individual points of view.

There is always a fascination about the traveler to unknown lands. We see its manifestations in little things. Who of those who have walked beside swift rivers or on the ocean shore has not thrown a stick or even a leaf into the water and watched it drift out of sight? Who has not had the wildly romantic ambition to buy the whole stock of the toy-balloon peddler and turn them loose one by one to soar into the unknown ocean

Balloons That Tell Wondrous Tales

That is what natural science is now doing and many a reader of the reports of the meteorologists may feel a certain envy of them and their sport. But it has come to be a highly practical form of sport with the development of aviation, and the weather bureau has recently announced that it is about to be extended to a score or more of stations of the burgau, located along the more important airways.

There are two sorts of balloons that the aerologists use in their study of this atmosphere of ours, and each has a different tale to tell. In the one case the story is easily read but the story teller never returns; in the other the story is never known until the voyager of the skies returns to earth, but then he brings with him a tale of romance and discovery that makes even the polar air voyages seem tame. The more prosaic and dependable travelers of the skies are known as free balloons, while those of wider scope and more uncertain return are called sounding balloons from their fancied likeness to the sounding lead of the seaman.

The free balloons are simply big toy balloons about three feet in diameter and made of extra good material. They are set free on housetops or on open fields where there is a good view of the sky. At the spot where they begin their voyage are two men: one with a range finder, the other to record and time his observations. From the moment the voyage is begun until the balloon is lost to sight, observations are taken every few minutes. These can be very quickly worked out and tell almost at once the direction and force of the wind at all the levels at which planes usually fly. The balloon, of course, keeps on rising until it bursts in the rarified air, but generally long before then it is lost to the sight even of the powerful glass attached to the observer's range finder. It has told its story, fulfilled its purpose and come to a lonely yet romantic end.

The sounding balloon is different. It carries a passenger which, although inanimate, reports more accurately on the wonders of the journey than any human voyager could do. This inani-mate passenger is a strong but light wicker frame containing a small case of most delicately contrived instruments that record continuously the air pressure and temperature from the beginning of the voyage until its end. The balloon rises until it bursts. Its wreckage then acts as a sort of parachufe for the instrument case which descends unharmed to earth. There the uncertainty begins, for the world is a wide place with many empty spaces, and many records are lost in water or in desolate places; but enough of them are found to make the experiments well worth while.

These sounding balloons are the true celestial rovers. No human being has ascended half so far as have some of them. The airplane alti-tude record is only a little more than seven miles, but altitudes of ten miles are common with sounding balloons, fourteen-mile, heights with sounding balloons, fourteen-mile, heights are not infrequent, while some flights have been made close to twenty miles above the surface of the earth. And it is a weird story these lonely pilots of man's mind bring back to earth, a tale of a great blanket of atmosphere quite unlike that which is commonly known; a region intensely cold, it is true, but nevertheless warmer than the air miles below; a cloudless, arid layer of quiet, almost stagnant, winds, lying like a blanket over the turbulent, weather-breeding, damp air below. Such is the mysterious "stratosphere," whose secrets men are just beginning to fathom with the aid of these fragile watchers of the skies.

Editorial Notes

It is remarkable how largely the consciousness of the world has given acceptance in late/ years to the recognition that fear is one of the greatest menaces with which it is confronted. On every hand those with eyes to see find evidences of this fact in most unexpected quarters. In the July issue of the Municipal Employee, for instance, a magazine devoted to the interest of the municipal employees in southern California, and Los Angeles in particular, there was published as the leading editorial an article under the caption, "The Oppression of Fear." "There is no doubt that the evil confronting mankind today is fear," it starts off, adding, mankind today is fear," it starts off, adding, "fear of disaster, poverty, want and woe, sickness and so on through the many ramifications which spread throughout all our daily activities." Of course, it applies the thought to its own especial interests, and one reads: "Thus we will gradually overcome the fear of expression and provide the way for public addresses on municipal engineering problems." Always when fear is removed a "way is provided" for constructive activities!

The so-called championship tournament that is being held in connection with the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial is in full swing, and despite the efforts of skillful reporters to gloss over unpleasant details some deplorable facts persist in coming to the surface. For instance, in a news story printed after the first performance, this descriptive phrasing is used, "Cowhands skilled in tossing a rope, cowhands with physical subleties, ready to trip up a wary calf and hogtle it before it could send forth its plaintive cries." And one of the "competitors" is said to have run down a calf, lassoed it, leaped from his horse and tied it up, all in twenty-six seconds. Cruelty, barbarism, and a type of hardihood that cannot be designated courage surely constitute a poor trinity for twentieth century edification. The horrors behind the scenes, of course, the yelling crowds do not see. Such exhibitions are unworthy of a great exposition. The public has it in its power to put a stop to them.

Far Away and Long Ago

DO YOU see that film of smoke rising through the plane trees that grow in the bottom of the ravine? You know that it is only from the fires that the women from the mine have made to do their washing by; is sheltered from the winds from north and east. Beside it there's a pony cart, and near by the glow of old Jack's fire.

"Sar shan, pal? (How are you, broth-r?) I thought I but that film of blue above the green seems for a moment to tighten something in one's chest and make one's breath

And the sound of horse bells from the string of ponies making for the mountains with their loads joins with the clear radiance of the early day in this wild open land to weave a web of memories that tries to catch and draw your feet with the cobwebs of romance and youth, to wander off the rough but well-worn path that leads you to the cushion of your office chair.

But it is something more than just the memories of routh that fills your thoughts and tries to drag your feet from off the way to go in search of some new scene, some broad vale or some shady wood that, it always seems must lie beyond the line of hills beside the beaten track.

That call to leave the highway reaches far back beyond the centuries of settled life, deep into the hazy, clouded past a thousand generations back, when every man wandered from his infancy with his few belongings packed on wiry, shaggy ponies, to move, as fancy and the changing seasons prompted, across the plains and hills.

But only clear blue smoke can so enmesh the hearts of men. White smoke is dense and suffocating because the very fire itself can only smolder when it burns such very fire itself can only smolder when it burns such things as the wet and rotting leaves and garden stuff that tell of houses, cities, fields and fenced-in spaces. And black smoke tells of darkness and turmoil.

But clear blue smoke brings to my thought many other things, things far away and long ago indeed. It recalls ovenings when I crossed a big stone bridge and left a river and a little country town behind. Past first a park gate and a row of English elms against the sky I went, and then the last lighted cottage window to the open road beyond

Up on the hill I left a thousand things behind, for there

Up on the hill I left a thousand things behind, for there the night is lighter and stars begin to glimmer in the ocean depths between the slowly sweeping island clouds, and over Swyncombe Down an orange glow is heralding the rising of the first bright segment of the giant moon to cut the curving horizon of hills.

Light feet and shoes can hardly feel the road, and after the first twenty paces, so fresh and sweet is the rainy evening air, that breath comes deep and willy. Two miles out there used to be a larch copse, but perhaps it has gone now, for it must have grown up long ago and maybe has been cut for timber; but there were nightingales there then, and once I saw a rosy crossbill among the branches.

Just beyond the coppice there is a lane, a chingerdrom, where there were always early primroses among the last year's oak leaves, and a few bundred yards down the iane year's oak leaves, and a few hundred yards down the lane a worked-out gravel pit.

There! Can't you smell it? I know that that smoke is clear blue by daylight, and that it comes from a fire that has burned for hours. For, for those who know, there's a difference in the smell of smoke that springs out of "carpenter's wood," boards, or planks, or beams, from that which comes from dry, quick-burning sticke and twigs, burning fast and bright, just lit; maybe, to boil a kettle at a picnic.

But there is another scent yet besides those two that comes from blue smoke. The smoke rises slower, as there is less hent below to send it up, and that is because the fire has been alight for hours; all day and all the night before, perhaps, just glowing, dreaming, mormuring, whispering beneath a great stump of hazel or a huge limb of beech or oak; quite dry, it must be, or the steam would make the smoke turn white.

Yes, there is the old green vardo (caravan). I can see it by the moonlight now under the quarry bank where it

"Sar shan, pal? (How are you, broth-r?) I thought I shoon'd yer prasterin' down the drom" (running down the road).

So by good fortune he's at home and the other folk are not yet back from the gav (town), where they have gone to sell their lace and buttons. Lift up the flap, then, of the dingy, tattered tan (tent); creep in and sit down cross-legged on the heap of sacks and straw on which he sleeps in the little arched annex that is really part of the main circular tent.

A few hazel rods are stuck in the ground and drawn in at the top to meet an arch, and there is something like the quarter of a sphere. The arch of hazel rods gives on to the part that is made like a Sioux tent, though smaller, the inclining rods being drawn together at the top with string. All is covered in with old sacks and smoke-browned opening.

Old Jack Smith, or Petulengro, as he claims his name to be, was a strange survival in that modern world. He was a small, hook-nosed gypsy type with the true black shiny curls. He sometimes made clothes pegs or butchers wooden skewers, but otherwise he rarely worked and just as rarely begged, and he never whined at fate or seemed to wish to change his lot.

Winter and surpress he lived close in his test for he

Winter and summer he lived alone in his tent, for he stayed on by the gravel pit when other wanderers had moved away. He seemed to know nothing of his ancestry and could neither read nor write, and only knew a little and could neither read nor write, and only knew a little Romany. But despite his ignorance he had nothing of the stolid English rustic in his ways and speech, and he readily invented stories wherewith to begule my sympathies or gain my interest, but of which he would later quite cheerfully deny all knowledge.

It was a book that first led me to speak a word of Romany to him as I passed him on the road, and of all the books I have ever read on gypsy life, that one has stirred me most, though I have never seen it named by those who write of sympass. If men can weave a spell with those who write of gypsies. If men can weave a spell with words, that book held one for me. How I ported over it as a boy at school, and what hours I stole to make a lavo-lil (word book) from all the words and phrases that its pages held.

It have read it many times, and even now it makes me restless and upeasy. To me the book was a classic, for the characters and scenes had all of them reality enough to make it seem that I should meet their counterparts on any village green or quiet common.

Some day I think, too, that Samson Leveridge, his Uncle Plato and his Granny Charlotte will become as famous as Jasper Petulengro and Simi Lovell, for everyone who knows the magic of the English lanes and roads and who has read of the vardo that Samson's mother bought and fitted out to travel down to Devon to joun his father's kin in Fernleigh Coombs, or who has met Young 'Vester, or Passon Mark, or Sir George L'Estrange and his family secret in the pages of "Number 747," will forever feel the power of the spell that the sight of clear blue smoke can weave about his steps, or that the scent of it will conjure up when a damp and brings it through the stillness of a startight night on lonely hills.

Despite the many yoggin' tans that have been made and left beside the chingerdrom that comes from very far away and long ago, I can still believe I hear old Granny Charlotte's very tones as she mumbles:

"We in't kaired o' goodlo no yet o' lon

"We in't kaired o' goodlo no yet o' lon
And a tough skin earries the sway
When we're oprey the drom."

The World's Great Capitals: The Week in Paris

ASTONISHING are the figures just published of the receipts of the theaters, the music halls, the concerts, the cinemas, and other resorts for the past year. They show that 408,000,000 francs have been paid in Paris as entrance fees to the numerous spectacles. This is 56,000,000 francs more than in the previous year. If there is any moral to be drawn, if is surely that financial difficulties in a country do not militate against public pleasures. On the contrary, more and more money is spant in this way as the situation grows worse and worse. What is the reason? Is it that the people are just as well off, if not indeed better off, with a depreciated currency? Or is it that the people have greater need of amusement as is it that the people have greater need of amusement as the fiscal realities become more menacing? Probably both explanations are partly correct. In any case, the theaters and cinemas are the last places to suffer. Out of these amounts, however, it is to be noted that taxes for the poor reach the sum of 35,000,000 francs and state taxes 38,000,000 francs. The theaters register 152,000,000, the cinemas 117,000,000, the music halls and concerts 113,000,000, the circuses and skating rinks 13,000,000, the balls 11,000,000, and the museums 2,000,000. In each category there is a considerable augmentation.

It may be that the record for the duration of a lawsust has been reached in the famous affair of the common land of four little villages in the Alpes-Maritimes. Judgment has just been finally given by the Court of Appeal after proceedings which have lasted since 1327. Away back in the Middle Ages the process began, and the first verdict was given almost exactly 600 years ago. It has trailed along from century to century. The Renaissance, the Reformation, iong wars, many changes of regime, the Revolution, the Empire, have made up the history of France until, after over half a century of the Third Republic has elapsed, the possession of these few thousand acres of pasture land has been determined. The record of this case would be in miniature the story of the soil of France, such as Henri Béraud has endeavored to tell it, in a remarkable novel, which is not the romance of a few individuals, but the romance of a community from the fourteenth century to our own days, "Le Bois du Templier Pendu."

One cannot but admire the strenuous efforts of the Paris branch of the Salvation Army which have resulted in the opening of a great institution for homeless women in the Faubourg Saint-Antoine which will contain between 700 and 800 inmates. Seven million france have been raised in a few months, and although there are still many lonely women unprovided for, happiness has been brought by material comfort and moral help to a large number of cases. It is extraordinary what sympathy has been aroused and enthusiasm developed in Paris in respect of this hostel. Ministers of all denominations, members of the Government, the Ambassadors of the United States and of England, and in particular the foreign colonies of the French capital, have unstintedly brought their help. Of its kind the home is unquestionably a model.

It is not often that one finds such celebrated names in the list of awards of the Académie Française. Generally one expects literary prizes to go to young and promising men, not to men who have long been known. There is, as Sinclair Lewis has well pointed out, much to be said against these rewards, but certainly it is impossible to dispute that, if rewards for excellent work are to be given, they could not be better deserved than by Georges Courteline, who is regarded by many people as the greatest comic writer of our age; by François Mauriac, whose style is truly distinguished, and by Gilbert de Voising, whose notations of his voyages are subtle and distinctive.

Here are the three men whom the Academic has selected as best representing the national literary output; and the selection must be widely approved.

Paris is threatened with considerably higher charges for gas, electricity, and underground railroad travel. The municipal budget, like the national budget, shows a deficit. The deficit for the city alone is 167,000,000 francs, while the Department of the Seine has a debit balance of 82,000,000 francs. Expenditure can be cut down, but the receipts must also be increased. The prefect even recommends a short-term loan of 60,000,000 francs to provide funds for carrying on the municipal services. The inhabitants of Paris already feel that the burden is unduly heavy and the proposals are naturally unpopular. Yet heavy and the proposals are naturally unpopular. Yet the augmentation of charges, onerous as it is, is relatively small in comparison with the depreciation of the currency.

More proof of the development of air transport is supplied by the record of a single day at the Paris airport, Le Bourget. On the day in question no fewer than twenty-one machines arrived at Le Bourget with 112 passengers and over two and one-half tons of goods, besides a consignment of several thousand pigeons; while seventeen airplanes left Le Bourget with seventy-eight passengers and four and one-half tons of cargo—a total of thirty machines, 190 passengers and seven tons of freight, without counting the pigeons, which must have found this form of flight novel and surprising.

form of flight novel and surprising.

One of the beauty spots of Paris is the Etoile, with its Are de Triumphe and its magnificent avenues radiating in all directions. The authorities are determined that it shall not be spoiled. They frown upon posters and luminous advertisements which have recently made their appearance in this quarter. A commission recommends that sky signs and posters of all kinds shall be banned (1) within a radius of 300 yards of the Etoile; (2) on roots within 600 yards of the Etoile if they are visible from the Are de Triomphe; (3) in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogue, and (4) along the whole length of the Champs Elysees. It is good to know that the authorities still preserve an aesthetic sense and are jealous of any encroachments on the handsome sites of the city.

The Rodeo at the Sesquicentennial

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: I am grateful to know that THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONTON Would publish a letter deploring the rodeo. The writer of it is under a false impression, however, in thinking that some of the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial visitors are indifferent to the horrors of the so-called champion-ship tournaments.

are indifferent to the horrors of the so-called champion-ship tournaments.

On July 5, after witnessing what, to my sense and to that of quite a few other spectators, was a horrible demonstration, I wrote letters in "protest of such brutal treatment of dumb animals" to a Philadelphia paper and to the S. P. C. A.

My letter to the paper was never published, however.

Nor did I ever hear if there was any investigation made by the S. P. C. A. From what I have learned, these demonstrations are legal.

When we cannot use the press for these protests it is hard to make our sentiments understood by the public. I am in hope that there will be a public protest to forbal such demonstration here in America, especially at such an exposition as the Sesquicentennial,
